for that sad day she never knew a woman's watchful care, and her maiden heart was left to wander at will. After the death of his wife Colonel Taylor would have none but servants about his house, and Annie was growing to womanhood with no gentle hand to restrain the impulsive nature inherited from her father. Her mother had been a woman of sense, but there she found restraint only in idle, and her waywardness was belied by her nature. She was at home spending her winter holidays with her father, as had been her yearly custom.

One day, in the last letter Colonel Taylor lowered his chin, rolled up his eyes, and gazed at his child over his spectacles as if he were a connoisseur studying an article of vertu, and merely shouting "Haumph!"

[illegible]

So when New York's morning came,
By the pane she took her station;
Eyes averted and cheeks aflush,
With the firg of expectation.
Thus but for a moment's space,
Then a cloud of disappointment
Falling on her vision,
That the world was out of joint, meant.

Quick she turned, with scornful eye
And with dainty nose tipstilt—
And at the same, slitting
Shot a glance that should have wilted.
"Why, what is the matter, dear?"
Flashed across her as a pout, "It
Is ver y same old year"
And vero's tuffin new about it!"

Hartford Republican

PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY MORNING.

JO. B. ROGERS, Editor and Proprietor.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1892.

CHOLERA is spreading in Hamburg.

It's time to pick out the new leaf you propose to turn over—Sunday.

CHRISTMAS brought the usual number of killings, fights, drunks and broken heads.

BORN, to-morrow night about midnight, to the wife of Father Time, a bouncing boy, 1893.

The Democratic leaders have an elephant on their hands in the tariff question. They realize as everybody else that "they'll be damned if they do and damned if they don't," and they are uncertain as to which is less dangerous "to do" or "to don't." In the mean time the Republicans will look on and "just let 'em fix it."

It is not without sadness that we announce the approaching demise of a very worthy being, who has been for many days the companion of us all. But such is our duty. We all know him. He has been a friend to us all. We may censure him, perhaps. He has given us gifts and has taken from us. He has made our hearts both glad and sad. He is dying, yet we love him still. Around him some will entwine garlands, others will re-visit him in tears, but all will love his memory ever. The stiff grasp of his hand is cold in death. Speak gently, he will soon be gone. Dear old year, for aye, Good bye!

At no time in the history of Hartford since the days following the killing of Kinchelo by Dr. Hart, have our people been so intensely excited over any event as they have been during the last few days over the developments in the disgusting scandal, with the details of which our reader are already acquainted, and which forms the darkest page in the annals of the town. Our citizens have gathered in all the business places, have collected in little knots on the streets, anywhere, everywhere to discuss the disclosures of the last few days. Our people have read newspaper accounts of such affairs occurring elsewhere, but this has been real experience. They have needed the efforts of no sensational reporter to help them realize its full weight. It has been seen and felt by every good citizen to be, not merely a newspaper sensation, but an absolute fact; and unvarnished shame. May a kind Providence deliver us from another such.

The spirit of charity is not always confined to those who make the greatest pretensions in that direction, nor are acts of benevolence performed alone by long faced followers of the Nazarene. Many, many times deeds that bear evidence of the promptings of a heart beating in harmony with the great pulse of humanity come to our notice when the unpretentious giver of good things claims none of these distinctions. A case in point: Last Saturday a little child was put on Field's bus at Beaver Dam with few, or no directions as to where it should go. But on the way over it was learned the child would be sent to the Poor House. A gentleman on the bus, a prominent citizen of Hartford, was carrying home Christmas tricks for his bright little ones, but, who thought he, will make glad the heart of this little out-cast, who in a few hours will be in the Poor House? That evening Santa Claus was ordered, in making his joyous rounds, not to pass by the little one at the home prepared for those who have no home, without leaving a sufficiency to make the little wanderer happy. Such deeds are not forgotten, neither by man nor God.

HARDINSBURG.

Dec. 26.—Miss Annie L. Gardner, of Union College, Barre, Vermont, was at home last week.

Will Miller and Isabella Miller; John Hendricks and Clara Miller were married Dec. 22, at the home of the brides.

Martin McCrea, one of the oldest citizens of the town, died Dec. 23. Miss Sallie Hook, a young lady of about fourteen died Dec. 24.

Estel Sutton, Louisville, is at home visiting his parents. James Casey, of Cloverport, came to town the other day and imbibed too freely. He was locked up and subsequently fined. Will Beard, who was also drunk, made himself conspicuous by interfering with the officer while taking Casey to jail. He was also taken before the Court and fined. People who come to this town and get drunk and disorderly, may expect to pay for their biliousness.

Misses Mattie Heston and Emma May, who are teaching school, were at home to spend the holidays.

Mrs. Lula Bush went to Bewleyville Saturday to visit her sister, Mrs. Pigott.

Christmas is observed to commemorate the birth of Christ. It should be kept with reverence like the Sabbath. Quite the opposite is true however. It seems to be growing fashionable now-a-days, for persons to get drunk on Christmas. Young men who are sober throughout the year take this day to get on a spree. More whisky is sold Christmas than any day in the year, unless it is an election day. It is getting time that this damnable traffic should be swept from the face of the earth.

"Poor old Kentucky, she is still swinging on behind." The time has been when Kentucky at home and abroad was recognized as the Grand old Commonwealth. That time has passed. It is not necessary to mention the stupid and inexcusable system of politics that has pervaded the atmosphere for the last quarter of a century in this State. Everything smells strongly of Bourbon Democracy. The remarkable assiduity exhibited by the present Legislature, however, has clapped the climax. Owing to the stupendous stupidity of this body, Kentucky will not be represented at the World's Fair, The Solons, who are assembled at Frankfort flatter themselves perhaps, with the assurance that they are dominating their time, mind, body and soul, to the interest of the people. They are mistaken. The people and the State would be better off by far, if the last one of them had resigned at the start. But as they did not see fit to do this, they may rest assured that the people will see to it that they all resign in November '93.

Miss Lizzie Smith, who is teaching at Elizabethtown; Miss Maggie Smith, who is teaching at Owensboro; Miss Irene Board, who is teaching at Stephensport; and Milton Board, Jr., who is attending the Medical University at Louisville, are all at home to spend the holidays.

Miss Effie Kincheloe has completed her school in the Wesley Chapel neighborhood, and is now at home. Her patrons were pleased with the school.

Hook-Snead.

Mr. Clint P. Hook and Miss Mary Snead were united in marriage at the M. E. Church in Hardinsburg on the evening of Dec. 22. Rev. W. B. Snead officiating. P. Morris Beard and Miss Lida Heston were the attendants. Mr. Hook is the local editor of the Republican, and the organ of the Third Party in this Congressional District. Miss Snead is the popular daughter of Rev. W. B. Snead. The Church was filled with the friends of the happy couple.

Through an unavoidable delay I failed to get to Poplar Grove, where Mr. L. D. Ford Truman is teaching. He has 45 pupils enrolled and an average of about 30. I learn the bright girls and boys are advancing rapidly. The following were out: Rurus Cheek, Manah Free, Henry Marlow, Tim Cheek; Miss Sallie Cheek, Mrs. Sallie Cheek, Mrs. Martha Hill. Total, 7.

WHITTINGHILL.

Wednesday, Dec. 7—No. 34; Miss Mollie Tunstall, teacher. Pupils in district, 102; pupils enrolled in school, 82; pupils present, 35. Visitors, Wm. H. Marshall, Cicero Whittinghill, John Johnson, Cicero Miller, Remus Carter and another I failed to get. Total, 7.

Surprise Box.

MR. EDITOR:—Will you be so kind as to allow me space in your valuable paper to acknowledge the receipt from my congregation at Pleasant Ridge, Daviess county, Ky., of a large box well filled with both the necessities and luxuries of life, as a Christmas present to their pastor and family. Such offerings are worth infinitely more in the heart of a faithful pastor, than their intrinsic value and far more than the payment of the same amount on his salary. The latter being simply the payment of a debt, while the former is a most gratifying expression of appreciation.

Pleasant Ridge is the youngest church of the Daviess County Association. She pays her pastor's salary every month and not then content with that, but delights to give him an exhibition of the high esteem in which he is held by them in these extra contributions to his comfort and encouragement. Let this example be emulated by older and richer churches.

May Heaven's richest benedictions rest upon every donor, and upon my precious little church at Pleasant Ridge.

J. S. COLEMAN, Pastor.

P. S.—Since receiving the box mentioned above, we have also been made the happy recipients of similar favors from a number of kind ladies of our Hartford congregation. How gratifying to the heart of a hard-working pastor, who has made large sacrifices and endured great hardships in behalf of a people, to be remembered by even a few of the most thoughtful ones of his church. Thinking these most affectionately for their kindness, many others learn how to appreciate and encourage and render happy a faithful servant.

J. S. COLEMAN, Pastor.

The Importance of The Sunday School Union.

It is evident to everyone that no enterprise so extensive in its influences, so eternal in its results should be neglected as is the Sunday School. Every other enterprise of like nature is well organized. The literary school has an almost perfect organization for the purpose of training the intellectual in man, and it seems that it is only reasonable that the schools for the spiritual development of man should receive all the advantages to be obtained by a fraternal and mutually assisting organization.

It is true we are backed by no State School Fund, and, with little material for leaders, except what is inspired by an enthusiasm, which, too, often degenerates into a fanaticism hurtful to the cause, which it upholds—the Sunday School is too often a failure.

The teachers very often are untrained, having little or almost no knowledge of the subject to be taught to the class, and very seldom is one found who takes enough interest in this all-important work to teach as a class should be taught. The consequence is that not one-half of the Sunday Schools are what they should be.

The object of the Sunday School Union is not to interfere with the work of the churches, not to organize Union Sunday Schools, only where any other is impracticable, but to train teachers and officers for their work, to inspire them with zeal and love for their noble cause and to organize and keep in operation schools in communities where there are no Sunday Schools. Will the twenty-five or thirty church buildings in the county that have no Sunday School co-operate with us that we may help them? Will those that have Sunday Schools work with us that their schools may be improved and be productive of better results? "We are workers together in Christ," then let us not impede, but assist each other in any enterprise, which has for its aim the moral spiritual advancement of the people.

$100 Reward $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address, F. J. Enough as Good as a Feast.

Husband—My dear, inasmuch as this New Year's day I have a suggestion to make—What is it?
Wife—Suppose we swear off on that Christmas Turkey.

New Year's Advice.
Put by the pipe, put by the bowl,
Put by the word profane,
The seasons in their onward roll
Bring New Year's round again.

Put by the eyes whose deepening glow
Have set your brain awhirl;
Put by (this vain advice, we know)
That winsome, witching girl.

All things on which cold reason frowned
Put by—but show your sense
And put them where they'll all be found
A month or six weeks hence.

—Washington Critic.

Not Fit.

St. Peter (to the ghost of 1892)—What are you looking for around here?
1892.—Why, I want to get in.
St. Peter.—Well, you'd better shake off some of the habits that you learned on earth first.

He Was There.

Dashaway—I thought you were going to see the old year out at Clubbery's last night? I looked in there about 12, but I didn't see anything of you.
Jagway—You didn't go far enough, old man. You ought to have looked under the table.

1893

Hall to ninety-three youngest born of time,
Stealing upon the earth with noiseless tread,
Within thine eyes a prophecy sublime,
The promise of the ages long since fled,
Hands the hand of fate to us extend,
The reign of Freedom over Oppression now
Uprears its ruthless and defiant head,
Child of the voiceless centuries, welcome thou!

Beaming and Complacent.

The at-peace-with-the-world feeling existing in the bosom of W. R. Brown, of Iowa, when he wrote: "The doctors pronounced me a severe case of blood poisoning caused by kidney disease. Kept my bed two months. They gave me up to die, when I got Dr. Fenger's Kidney and Bladder Cure. Soon commenced discharging matter in the urine. After taking five bottles, I got all right, well and sound. It is regarded as a wonderful cure. I was excited to die as I am 70 years old. This would be wonderful if it were used to relieve such much letters. Equally good in female complaints, rheumatism, heart disease, dropsy, all blood diseases. Restores the kidneys, purifies the blood and breaks the diseased tissues. Health is the result. If satisfaction not given, money refunded. Take home a bottle today.

A difficulty that came near proving fatal occurred at Cromwell last Saturday night. Several parties, including Col. Beatty, Town Marshal, were in W. T. Tillford's dry goods store, when Frank and Ike Cooper came in. Tillford, who was drunk, immediately made at Ike Cooper with a knife, but Frank pulled Ike out of Tillford's way, but he crowded Cooper and Col. Beatty walked up and commanded that peace be maintained,

when Tillford left Cooper and turned upon Beatty, throwing his left arm around the latter's neck, saying:

"D-n you I've got you now where I've wanted you a long time," at the same time plunging the knife almost to the hilt behind the jugular vein.

Beatty, by a quick motion, lifted Tillford's arm before he could lengthen the gash and thus saved his life. Half the width of the knife blade farther front would have severed the vein and death would have been the result. Tillford is doing a good business but has had a reputa-

A WEIRD TALE

Of the Death-Rain of Meteors in Dakota.

The Legend Which Tells How the Sioux Were Aided in a Great Battle Against the Crow-Victims From Heaven which Brought Down Death—wherever the Origin, It is a Fact That a Section of the Country is Struck with Round Meteoric Stones.

[B'a'e]

Probably the strongest tale of shower of meteors has been handed down by the Sioux Indians in Dakota. A story is told by the old men of the tribe, and they say that they received it from their ancestors, who were participants in the fight by the intervention of the Manitou. The story has been handed down by tradition from father to son until it has become a part of the tribe's history, and is firmly believed by all the Indians on the Coteau range. Nor is the story without evidence to prove its truth. The very name of the Cannon Ball river is derived from the traces of this miraculous intercession of the heavens of the Indian fight.

The "Cannon Ball river" is a mystic title, indeed, and perhaps the reader will wonder from what source the name was derived. The Cannon Ball river is one of the many streams of the northwest that join to make the "Big Muddy," and as it wanders through the "Bad Lands" and down through the valleys of the Coteau range there is apparently nothing to distinguish it from the many other rivers and streams that water that country. But there is a peculiarity about the stream that is most singular, and one that would probably pay a geologist to investigate. An hour's ride from Bismarck, on the opposite shore of the Missouri from Standing Rock Indian agency, is the mouth of the stream, where its waters mingle with the muddy river that flows to join the Father of Waters near St. Louis. Along this stream, a distance of four or five miles from its mouth, may be found hundreds and thousands of stones of all sizes. The reader may think there is nothing extraordinary in this. The extraordinary part is not the presence of the stones, but in their shape and weight.

The stones of the Cannon Ball river are far different from the stones generally found along the streams of the Dakotas. Each and every stone is a perfect sphere and is extraordinarily heavy. The size range from that of a large bullet to that of a ten pound cannon ball, some of them even reaching the size of three feet in diameter. The balls are much prized by the people who have moved into that country, and many have them as ornaments, either in the house or, if they are large, in their yards. They are strange curious, and no one ever visits the river without taking away one or more of the round stones as mementoes of the visit. No one has ever attempted to explain the origin of these stones, but the writer, though there must be something that would explain their presence, and spent several days among the Sioux Indians trying to discover if there was any legend connected with the stones. One old chief was at last induced to tell what the old people had heard about them. The story was told with all the seriousness that characterizes the aborigines when they are telling the legends that have been handed down as a part of the tribal history. I will tell the story as it was told to me and let the astronomers account for it as they please, neither vouching for the truthfulness of it, or denying that it bears the resemblance of a romance.

Many years ago, which, in Indian lore may mean fifty or a thousand years, the white man had never been heard of in these regions, and the mighty Sioux nation reigned supreme all along the great water, from its head to its mouth. Their vast possessions stretched from the Coteau range in the far North to the mighty waters that rolled in turbulent streams to the gulf far to the South. And the tents and tepees of the mighty Sioux nation dotted the whole country, while thousands of braves were ready to follow the fortunes of the reigning chieftain. In their power there was one drawback, and that was the mighty nation of Crows, which inhabited a land far to the West of the possessions claimed by the Sioux, and there was a constant enmity between the two powerful nations. It had never come to a war of extermination, but the Sioux knew that their enemies could outnumber them in the matter of warriors, and consequently had never attempted to make and open issue for possession of the land claimed by the Crows. As time passed on, however, the Crows became more and more aggressive, and at last it became almost constant warfare, with the Crows gradually pushing their way into the domain of the Sioux. Hardly a week passed without a battle, which ended with fearful slaughter. Each time there was a fight the number of the Sioux grew less, until at last the old chieftain of the tribe saw that it was but a question of time until their once powerful nation would dwindle away to nothing and become a part of the nation of their hereditary enemy.

They were not men to tamely sit down and die, nor were they men that would give up until the last hope was gone, and they fought on and on, even when they saw that all chance of victory was lost. One dreadful day there came a breathless runner into the village where the last remnant of the nation had gathered, and his news was that the Crows were coming with an overwhelming force and intended to utterly wipe out the last of the Sioux. The stronghold was strengthened and the Indians felt that this was to be the last of their race. It was to be a battle to the death. One of the tribes must be exterminated. To fall into the hands of the enemy meant torture that was a thousand times worse than death.

A small party of scouts was dispatched to look after the enemy and report upon their position, but these scouts never returned. Their bloody scalps were afterward seen dangling from long poles in the possession of the Crows. When this ghastly sight was brought before the entrenched Sioux a scene of consternation followed. The squaws and papooses, with the old and feeble warriors, were huddled together in one group, while the braves assembled under the leadership of the most noted chiefs and prepared for the onslaught of the enemy. Just when life looked darkest for the Sioux they appeared in their midst Long Red Dog, the medicine man of the tribe. He was the greatest known medicine man of the whole land, and his words had the weight of law with the Sioux. As he stalked into the crowd where the preparations were being made for battle the Indians flocked around him and listened for the words that might fall from his lips. A wave of his long, bony hand calmed the warriors and he spoke:

Brethren, the Crows have reinforced their already powerful army. Some of our once most trusted and faithful warriors are among them. They have proven themselves traitors to the blood that binds them to the Sioux. They have betrayed us and doomed us to die. The Crows will sweep down upon us and destroy every thing in reach. Death and destruction will mark their path unless something comes to save us. They are now but a short distance away, and we must take our ponies and flee to the banks of the river if we would save our lives. When the battle comes kill yourselves rather than fall into the hands of the Crows. Red Dog has spoken and his words.

Red Dog's words filled the Sioux with gloom, and the braves began to prepare for flight to the river. The ponies and squaws were packed and all that could not be carried was burned in order that it might not fall in the hands of the Crows. The fleeing Sioux reached the banks of the river when the advanced guard of the Crows was seen on a hilltop not half a mile away. Further flight was impossible and a stand was made for a fight. The Crows were now rapidly approaching and their numbers appeared to be almost countless. There seemed to be no salvation to the Sioux, who were huddled together, determined to fight to the last. Singing loudly their former war songs, the Crows dashed forward and the arrows and spears began to fall thick and fast among the Sioux. There seemed to be no hope for the Sioux, and Red Dog was just about to give the signal for the members of the band to kill themselves when there appeared an ominous gathering in the sky and a most peculiar feeling overcame the whole assemblage of the Sioux and Crows. The heavens assumed a dull greenish hue, such as usually precedes a tornado, and then a few drops of rain fell upon the heads of the combatants. But the rain soon changed into something that was stronger, and pebbles began dashing down upon the heads of the fighting Indians. The warriors stopped in amazement, and all gazed at the unaccountable sight that was seen. But the pebbles were not all that came down. The stones grew larger and larger until they assumed a size that meant death to all they struck. Down poured the cannon balls of heaven upon the Crows, but, wonderful to relate, not a Sioux was hit by one of the fearful missiles. The hand of the Manitou was seen in the destruction that was wrought to the hereditary enemy of the tribe, and the Crows were so panic stricken that they could not even flee, but cast themselves to the earth in their abject terror.

Hundreds of the Crows were slain by the mysterious pelting from the sky, and when the shower was over the remnant of the tribe hastily fled to their own land, pursued by the Sioux, who saw in the ending of the battle the return of their own supremacy in the country. From that memorable day the Sioux have been unmolested by other Indian tribes, and the round stones that are found in such abundance along the banks of the Cannon Ball River are the relics of the day when the Manitou of the tribe answered the prayers of Red Dog.

This is the legend, and there was evidently some foundation in fact, for the stones are of a meteoric character and show signs of erosion by fire.

Grandfather looks from the paneled wall
At grandmother hanging across the hall,
In the ripened glow of her stately grace;
And a frown comes over his shadowed face
As he says: "The world has grown a-kew,
My dear, since we were young—we two."

"Nothing that was the same to-day;
Old-time fancies are cast away;
All our scruples are laughed to scorn;
All our customs are quite outworn;
Each is seeking for something new—
We were content with the old—we two."

Into the shades of the grim old room,
Steal two forms through the twilight's gloom.
Grandfather's eyes are sharp to see,
And a deep voice utters tenderly:

"For aye will I love, and love but you,
And we'll follow love to the end—we two."

Grandfather's face has lost its frown,
And his eyes grown softer gaze gently down
On the pair who naught of his watching know.

"One thing goes on as it used to do
In the days when we were young—we two."

Women Playing at Love.

[From Ladies Home Journal.]

There is but one way in which a married woman may safely let her self out to be charming or fascinating to any man, and that is with the one purpose in mind, dominating all else, that she may arouse in him the conviction that her husband ought to be a happy man, writes Mrs. Burton Kingsland in an article on "Dangers of a Social Career" in the January Ladies Home Journal. A woman may sometimes increase her value in her husband's eyes by the admiration of others when it is solely for his honor that she is seeking to please.

Vanity is not the only moral danger of a life spent in fashionable society, though it leads to its most disastrous consequences in often alienating a wife's affections from her husband, and vice versa. They handle edge tools who "play at love," and the divorce courts seem to be the only place resorted to for the cure of such wounds. If "the little rift within the lute" has already begun in a wife's relations with her husband, let her repair it at once, and realize that her life-long happiness depends on that man. It helps wonderfully in arousing one's own waning affections to try to gain that of another and excite and deserve his highest admiration. There is another side to the subject—the husband may be in fault—but we are considering the matter from the woman's standpoint. Let us

"Act well our part,
There all the honor lies."

A Prize Word Puzzle.

EXPLANATION.—The following misplaced letters constitute when properly arranged the name of the most popular music publication on the continent, and the publishers of The Canadian Music Folio are offering a Prize Competition in connection with it, the sole object being to attract attention to their handsome publication and increase the circulation of it. As to the reliability of The Canadian Music Folio Company, where they are best known, contestants are held in Toronto, Canada, where they are best known, contestants in this competition are referred to any of the "Mercantile Agencies" or leading Daily Newspaper of Canada, which will verify the statement that we are the only house in the "Competition" business in Canada that faithfully carries out what it advertises, and furthermore, "Ours" is the only advertisement of this kind that The Toronto Globe, the leading Canadian Newspaper, will accept, which is but another proof of our integrity.
